1.  I would be able to statically allocate the collection of child pointers in each node because we already know how many children the node will have. There is also no reason to manually manage memory in this case, as the node and associated pointers will be automatically deleted when the node dies.